The Daily Oregonian.

SATURDAY MORNING MARCH 26, 1864

THE WEEKLY OREGONIAN.

THE WEEKLY OREGONIAN is published this morning. It contains the latest telegraphic news from the East and California in detail, a selection of the best Articles published in the DAILY OREGONIAN, and the corrected Market Reports and a Weekly Review of the same.

The WEEKLY OREGONIAN contains thirty-six columns of reading matter being far greater than that published in any other journal in the State, and we aim to make it the most reliable newspaper, especially in regard to that which pertains to Oregon interests.

Single copies, 12½ cents. $3 per annum, mailed to any part of the United States.

No flag but the Old Flag—the Red, White and Blue,
With the stars of a Union unbroken and true
Arise and defend it ye sons of the brave,
Whose blood bought the banner your valor must save

From the New Mines

We had the pleasure of a conversation yesterday with Mr D Power, who arrived from the Owyhee mines on Wednesday evening. Mr Power left there on the second of March, coming via Canyon City, in the John Day mines, to the Dalles. This he considers to be the best route by all odds to Owyhee. The trail was unobstructed by snow, and travel was pleasant, with good camping places the entire distance. Settlements are numerous from a place a few miles beyond Canyon City. There are three towns starting, in the Owyhee country, on Jordan creek, one about forty miles above its confluence with the Owyhee river, called Brooneville, Ruby City, two or three miles above that, and Silver City a mile further up. The growth of these places is greatly retarded for the want of building material. The present price of lumber is four hundred dollars per thousand feet, and in consequence of the great scarcity, Mr P is of the opinion that business generally will be backward the coming season. Lumber for ordinary purposes is scarcely to be had. The number of leads discovered in this new mining locality already amount to about fifty, and only a few of them have been properly prospected. Among the most prominent are the "War Eagle," "Last Chance," "Oro Fino," and the "Morning Star," all of which are known to be very rich in gold and silver. A few samples brought to this city by Mr P, will be assayed to day, and we have already given the result of an assay of some sixty pounds of rock from them, which shows what the country is made of. Our mines are now being tested, under all the inconveniences that result from the lack of capital. Only one or two, of the rich leads in Owyhee, have received the advantages of money to work them, and no machinery has yet been put in operation there. When it is we may expect a large yield of gold and silver to result from it.

JACKSON ON COERCING A STATE.—The following is a part of a heretofore unpublished letter written by Andrew Jackson to an intimate political friend, and fell into the hands of General Hurlburt at Memphis, since that city was taken by the Federal troops. The original is now with the Chicago Historical Society.

WASHINGTON March 25, 1833.

R M Burton [illegible] Nullification is expiring. Its last dying groan is just sealed by the repeal the ordinance and laws passed by the South Carolina Convention who passed it; and hereafter nullification and secession will never be heard of, except in holding up to scorn and detestation their advocates and particularly their prime movers. The bloody Hotspur (as the Nullies call the late judiciary Hall) has put this to rest. It spoke the united sentiments of the people from Maine to Louisiana, that disunion and secession are revolutionary measures and not political rights growing out of our Constitution and Confederacy. The natural right of man is to resist oppression when it comes. It equally belongs to communities. Where they have the physical power they succeed, otherwise, they will be coerced into obedience. * * *

Believe me your friend,
ANDREW JACKSON.

ENGLISH OPINION OF THE SANITARY COMMISSION.—The London Spectator concludes a long article on our Sanitary Commission as follows:

In every way we cannot help thinking the existence and success of this Commission is most creditable to the American people. It shows not only with what a resolution they entered on this struggle, but with what a fund of good sense they are endowed. We doubt whether even in England a voluntary society could be intrusted with so much power, and yet so carefully abstain from trenching on the province and duties of the Executive. In America they can do these things, and the same Cabinet Minister who originally gave the Sanitary Commission a six months span of life, now admits "that it has been of the greatest service to the country; that it has occasioned none of the evils expected from it, and that it has lively down all the fears and misgivings of the Government."

MAP OF THE MINES OF IDAHO AND OREGON.—We were yesterday shown a copy of the New Map of the mining sections of Idaho and Oregon, embracing the gold and silver mines of Boise and Owyhee. It was compiled chiefly from notes of Mr. George Woodman, of the travels and surveys, during the past year and a half, and was published in San Francisco. So far as our own personal observation goes, this is the best map we have seen, and is very plain in giving ideas of routes and localities, in the "upper country."

WHAT SCIENCE SAVES IN MINING.—It is well established that but a fraction of gold can be saved by the fixtures and arrangements in the crushing mills hitherto used at the mines, a large portion being swept off and lost in the tailings (chaff or refuse,) that portion is found by assay at the works of the Colorado Gold Mining Company to have been on an average sixty-five per cent, and it is now a well established fact, verified by successful experiments, that when these tailings are worked over in the Desulphurizing the Amalgamizing apparatus, (machines and fixtures recently invented and which have just been put in operation by the company above mentioned,) nearly all the gold contained in the ore can be saved. Of course the mills equipped with this apparatus will save double the amount they have previously done.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

The Life of a Soldier—What he Eats, How he Sleeps, and how he Fights.

Notwithstanding the voluminous accounts published of the manner in which our soldiers live, there are still many that are passed over by newspaper correspondents as too trifling to mention, which go far toward filling up the true picture of a soldier's life. We have seldom encountered a description so graphic and complete, and yet so unpretending, as the following contained in a letter from a private soldier in the Army of the Potomac to his little brother:

Dear Brother—I have nothing to send you for a Christmas present, so I will tell you a little about how soldiers live, fight and eat, and all I can about War and so that you can understand it better, I will do like the preachers and papers, divide it into chapters or parts, and part first will be how they live what they live on, and what they live in.

HOW THEY LIVE.

There is an officer called the "Commissary of Subsistence," who keeps a sort of store, sometimes in a wagon, sometimes in a big tent, and has charge of all the bread and meat, and what we have to eat. Every five days we get our rations from him. Sometimes we get nothing but coffee, sugar, salt meat, and hard bread for two or three weeks at a time. Some days we get for each man two spoonsful of sugar, three spoonsful of ground coffee, a spoonful of salt, two spoonsful of rice or three of beans, three or four little potatoes, a little loaf of bread, a pound of fresh beef, and now and then a little pepper, and once in a long time, about a quarter of a pint of molasses, vinegar whenever we want it, which is seldom, as we have nothing to eat it with. Sometimes we get a little bit of desiccated vegetables, which is a mixture of cabbage, potatoes, turnips, onions, carrots and red peppers, rice and string beans, ground up together and dried, and is used for making soup, but very few of us like it and we do not care much about it. We hardly ever get half of these things during a month, and never get them all at once. We cook for ourselves, and when we are on a march—and some marches last for two or three weeks—we cannot cook anything but coffee, rice and meat, as we only have one quart tin apiece, and very often they get lost or broken before the march is over. We cook our beef on a stick and generally eat our pork raw, as it is so fat that it would all melt away if we tried to cook it before the fire, and when we are very tired and hungry, we think it very good eating, and I have known men to wish for raw pork when they had fresh beef. When we are in camp, we have big tin kettles, called camp kettles, and frying pans, and manage to get along first-rate, though we sometimes have to cook three or four different dishes in one cup or skillet, and let the rest stand around the fire until we are done. Sometimes we lose our plates and have to split open an old canteen and make one, or use two or three crackers for a plate. Sometimes we get dried apples and cook them in our tins, and empty them on a plate, or some crackers, while we make our coffee. So you may know soldiers' fare is not very enticing if it is substantial. Sometimes our rations has so much bone, and sinew, and skin in and on it that we can't eat it at all and have to go without meat altogether until the next issue, but now that we are in camp, we get fresh meat twice a week and soft bread about as often and will get it oftener, after a while, if we do not march. I have now told you what we live on and will tell you

WHAT WE LIVE IN.

Each man has one or two pieces of cloth (white muslin) about five or six feet square. Two or three of us get together, and when we get into camp, we cut three poles, two about four feet long with notches on top, and about six feet long for a ridge pole. We set the short poles in the ground about six feet apart and lay the long one in the notches. We then button two tents together by means of the buttons and button holes provided for that purpose, and each has two loops on one end to put the pins through. We stretch it over the poles and drive pins through the loops into the ground, and our house is finished, unless we have extra tents to close up the ends. When this is done, the houses are about six feet square inside, and I have to curl up to keep either my head or feet from sticking out. For our bed we spread down a gum blanket, and make pillows of our knapsacks, two of us lie down together and cover ourselves with our blankets, which makes it warmer than for one to sleep by himself, as the blankets are big enough to cover two. If it rains, we generally get wet, as the water invariably runs under us, unless we have been in camp long enough to dig a ditch around the tent, or the water comes through the button holes. If the night is cold and dry, or we are near the enemy, or expecting to march early in the morning, we seldom pitch our tents, but use them for bedding. In winter, we cut logs and build little houses, many of them not fit for pig pens, and cover them with our tents, and build big fire-places out of mud and wood or stone. My house is a very comfortable one, and has a nice bunk, table, cupboard and benches to sit on, and a fine fire place, and we have plenty of the best clothes to keep us warm when we are at home. But we have to go on guard three days and three nights every week, and stay away all the time, so that sometimes we get bad colds and have very little sleep. Besides we have to do camp guard and fatigue when we are not on picket, and don't get many nights out of the week in our houses. I have now told you how we live, and will next tell you

HOW WE FIGHT.

When we get near the rebels, we are formed in two ranks and face towards them, one regiment beside another, and two or three lines behind one another. Sometimes it is ten or twelve miles, from one end of the line to the other, but generally only three or four. We are ordered to load, a lot of men are sent out in front of the line as skirmishers, and when the order is given to advance, (generally after a good deal of cannon firing is done,) they commence going towards the enemy. We follow them, and as soon as we get in range, the bullets begin to fly, and we hear all sorts of balls, shells, grape, shot and bullets, flying among us. The men cheer and yell like madmen, the officers yell out their orders, and the wounded shriek and groan, and it is almost impossible to tell one sound from another until we become accustomed to it.—Some men get their heads or legs or arms knocked off by a shell or a cannon ball, some get hit and are dead before they fall to the ground, men often run past the lines with their blood spirting all around—a sorry sight. The dead and wounded fall in our path, and we are compelled to go over them. The ground gets slippery in some places with blood, and the air grows so hazy that we can hardly see. Sometimes we get the enemy driven off, but often come back with less than half the men we had, and are compelled to stop fighting or to try same thing over again. In skirmish fighting the men get behind trees and stumps, or stones, or banks, or anything that will protect them a little, and shoot at every one they see on the other side. Sometimes on picket a man will slip up and shoot the sentinel without his knowing there was any one near. Sometimes a man in our uniform will ride up and say "surrender," and if any objection is made will shoot us on the spot. This last is called guerilla warfare, but is nothing but murder. I have now told you about how fighting is done, and will tell you how some of the soldiers have died. Some do not care about death at all and never murmur, some die as though they were just going to sleep, some die in great anguish, some die praying, and some swearing, but very few of our men groan or cry, and death seems to have no effect on the wounded. When the dead of a battle are buried, a hole is generally dug where they fall, and sometimes the dirt is just thrown over them where they lie, and the first rain washes it off, but if our own men bury them they are nearly always buried together and boards put up by their companions to tell where they are. But you have had almost too much of the details of war, and I am sure you will never take to it from love of the life of a soldier.

New Law and Justice in Virginia.

A Chapter on the Experience of a Provost Judge—The First Oath and Test Oath—Rebel Logic.

In the "Preliminary Report" made to the Secretary of War last June by the "American Freedmen's Inquiry Commission" you may find this passage:

"An officer in General Dix's staff, acting as Provost Judge at Fort Monroe, related to the commission, in graphic terms, with what earnestness and conscious pride of his new position, a negro sworn as a witness for the first time in his life, stood up to take the oath and deliver his testimony."

Your readers, Mr Editor, may feel some of the interest in this case which was felt and experienced by Robert Dale Owen and Dr Samuel G. Howe, the two commissioners who visited Fort Monroe and heard the story from Major Bolles, the Provost Judge and if you think they will also, you are welcome to publish it.

Major General Dix relieved Major General Wool and entered on his duties at Fort Monroe early in June 1862. His command extended beyond Old Point Comfort, and included the whole region from Williamsburg and Yorktown to Norfolk and Suffolk. In all that country martial law existed, and there were no civil magistrates or tribunals. Unnumbered wrongs and injuries were inflicted with impunity, on the one side, and submitted to with hopelessness, if not patient endurance, on the other. The General determined to establish a military court which should restore to this afflicted region something like organized justice, and the protection of personal rights. To this end he appointed Major John A. Bolles of your Commonwealth, Provost Judge, with authority to hear and determine all cases, civil and criminal (not military;) and to decide according to the principles of justice and equity, wherever there was no act of Congress or statute of Virginia sufficient in his opinion for the ends of justice every party having the right of appeal from the Judge to the Major General in command.

The establishment of this court was a memorable event to the colored population of that heretofore enslaved territory. They and their superintendent, Capt Wilder, will long remember it as the commencement of a new era in Virginia justice. Up to that time Captain Wilder had found his official position and duties difficult, painful and embarrassing beyond description,—to such a degree that had he not been a patient and faithful follower of Jesus, his cross would have been too heavy to be borne. Now there was a court, now there was law, and that law was the code of natural justice which knows no distinction of color: now there was a judge, and that judge was one of the general's staff officers, and a firm friend of the colored race, as well as a hearty disciple of Jeremy Bentham.

By the laws of Virginia, no colored person could be a witness in any cause wherein a white man was a party concerned. But now, the provost judge, to the equal astonishment of whites and blacks, civilians and military men, announced that he should take the testimony of every person colored or uncolored, bond or free, who knew anything about the material facts of the case, and attach to his story the credit which it might seem to deserve.

A year and a half has revolutionized what was then the perverted feeling of military men in regard to negroes. Then, with the exception of Gen Dix and the Provost Judge, there was hardly an officer in the department of Virginia who regarded the contraband or freedman, with even the good will of their old masters and overseers, and Judge Bolles's decisions were generally received with the comment, "Oh, he is a —— abolitionist!" But the Judge was fully sustained by the General, and these criticisms disturbed neither him nor his adjudication.

The country around Fort Monroe for many miles is almost a dead level. Indeed, you may travel twenty miles in any direction without finding a spot of ground twenty feet above tide water. Within this vast flat, a few miles from the fort, toward Buck river, there is a place called Fox hill. Nobody seems to know why it was so named, unless as one of the "poor white trash" in the neighborhood remarked, "because there was neither hill nor fox anywhere about." In the region of Fox hill were several excellent farms, one of which was the "Hudgins place," the property of absentee disloyalists—of fugitive masters, who had run away from their lands and negroes, and were now wanderers in Dixie. The Hudgins family had absconded when Magruder retired from Hampton, and under permission from Gen Wool, Capt Wilder had allowed a colored man named Anthony Bright, to occupy and cultivate the Hudgins farm. Under this permission, Anthony had carried on the place in 1861, and up to Aug 1862, being assisted by several other negroes, all of whom were indigent and industrious fellows, whose conduct had been very exemplary, and who were well spoken of by all.

In July or August, 1862, Mrs Hudgins and her two little children had unexpectedly returned to the farm, taken possession of the mansion, and set up a claim to the harvest of 1862. She came with her claim to the Provost Judge. On the other hand, Anthony Bright, in behalf of himself and of his black co-laborers, presented his claim to the fruit of his labors, and called on the Judge for protection. A day and hour were appointed for the trial. Mrs Hudgins was an intelligent lady, and in all her conduct and conversation made a very pleasant impression on all who observed them. Anthony Bright was a tall, finely formed and very bright young man of perhaps 30 years of age. He was a slave. His mother had been many years in California, and during that period Anthony had been left in charge of Mr and Mrs Hudgins who had allowed him, on payment of $75 a year, to work for himself, and to act as though he was a freeman.

About half an hour before the trial was to begin, Col Joseph Segar, the member of Congress from that district called upon the Provost Judge, in behalf of Mrs Hudgins, and among other things inquired if the Judge was intending to allow Anthony or any other slave to testify. The Judge answered, yes. But the Colonel asked him to reconsider that determination, reminding him of the exclusionary rule of the Virginia law of evidence, and remarking that in his own judgment the admission of colored witnesses would, more than almost anything else that could happen, displease the Union men among his constituency, and prejudice the cause of the Federal Government.

The Judge, however, was unmoved by that suggestion, and ventured to express the belief that never again in the Old Dominion would a colored man be banished as unworthy of belief or as unfit to be heard from a court of justice. However, Colonel," said he, "I will first examine Mrs Hudgins, and possibly she may save me the necessity of shocking the prejudice of your constituents. If she places the case beyond the need of further evidence, or is herself desirous to hear what Anthony will say, your difficulty will be obviated."

Accordingly Mrs Hudgins appeared in court and, after being sworn, proceeded to relate her story. From her statements and the documents which she produced, it appeared that the farm, which formerly belonged to her father, had been devised by him to her two minor children, and that she was the executrix of the will and the guardian of the little girls. Her husband now with the rebels had no interest in the farm. She went on to state what "Anthony said," and what "Anthony told me," and was interrupted by the Judge, who inquired, "But who is Anthony, Mrs Hudgins?" "Anthony," answered she with much surprise, "why, judge Anthony is the colored man that claims the harvest." "Yes," said the Judge, "but isn't he a slave, and would you think of believing what he said, or wishing me to hear his story?" "Of course, sir," replied she, "why should I not believe him? He was brought up in the family. I would believe him as quickly as I would one of my children." "And have you no objections to my examining Anthony, and attaching such credits as I please to what he may say?" "No objections in the world, judge! I want you to hear him."

Here the Judge exchanged glances with Colonel Segar, and said, "Well, Colonel, I don't see but I must gratify Mrs Hudgins," and the Colonel, with a sigh that was almost amusing responded "I suppose you must."

Anthony was accordingly called into court, and told all that Mrs Hudgins had said, to which he assented as strictly true. He was then asked if he had ever testified under oath. "No, sir," said he, very respectfully, "I never has." He was further asked if he knew what an oath was, and what would be the consequences of false swearing. "I 'spose so, master," was his answer. "If I ask God to hear me tell lie, God will punish me for lying." "Very well, Anthony," very truly answered," said the judge. "And now, Anthony," continued Judge Bolles, rising as he spoke, "I am about to administer to you the oath to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Hold up your right hand."

Ah, it was worthy of a long journey to be hold Anthony in that supreme moment of his life. As he lifted his hand and arms aloft, he seemed to gain several inches in height, his broad chest expanded and his dark eye lighted up as with the inspiration of a new manhood, and I never saw a nobler specimen of humanity in court or camp, and the African race never produced a worthier model of either physical or intellectual mankind. Every one present was strongly affected by this exhibition, and for myself, I can never forget it.

Anthony produced the permission of Capt Wilder and Gen Wool, and then told his story more clearly and intelligibly, even than Mrs Hudgins, and with a modesty as pleasing as his intelligence was remarkable. When he had finished his statement, the judge asked the lady if she wished to cross examine Anthony, but she said "No, I believe he has told the truth." And there so far as the evidence was concerned the case was ended. The judge gave the parties a short time to settle the matter among themselves, and at the end of that period as they had not come to a settlement, appointed a commissioner to divide the farm awarding one half of the harvest to the executrix and guardian as the representative of the land, and the other half to Anthony and his associates, as the representatives of the labor. The decision was satisfactory to both the parties in interest and even Colonel Segar was content with the result, though not entirely pleased with the process by which it was attained.

CONCENTRATION OF THE UNITED STATES ARMIES.—General Grant appears to have adopted the policy of concentration, with a view to bringing superior forces to bear against the armies of the rebellion, instead of attempting to occupy innumerable positions and scattering our hosts over the vast extent of country.

All the forces west of the Mississippi are now in motion toward Texas. Admiral Porter's fleet and a land force from Vicksburg have gone up the Red river. The Thirteenth and Nineteenth Army Corps, under McClernand and Franklin, are moving through the Teche region. Gen. Blunt will probably co operate from the Indian Territory. The grand object of these combined operations is to reach the most important section of Texas with an army capable of defeating Magruder, Kirby Smith and Price, and thus ending the war west of the Mississippi. There will be much arduous marching before the enemy can be reached and the campaign in that quarter cannot be ended before the first of May. If Gen Banks succeeds in this task he will wip unfading laurels.

Our largest army will probably be concentrated on the Tennessee, under Sherman's command, with Thomas Hooker, Logan, Granger and Palmer as his subordinates. This army overhangs the vital section of the South and its numbers will render it irresistible. When all the veteran regiments shall have returned, Sherman will have under his command an army as large as the combined forces of Lee and Johnson.—See Tycoon.

Galignani says that England consumes 1,000,000 lbs of ivory annually, or the product of 8,333 elephants. About 1,000 men are annually killed in the elephant hunts. A tusk weighing 70 lbs is considered by the trade a first class one. A short time ago an American house cut up a tusk which was not less than nine feet in length and eight inches in diameter, and weighed 800 lbs. In 1851 the same house sent over to the London Exhibition the largest piece of sawn ivory ever seen. It was eleven feet in length and one foot broad. The dearest ivory is that which is used for billiard balls. Since the conquest of Algeria by France the ivory trade has considerably increased in the north of Africa. The hippopotamus also yields ivory, which is much harder and less elastic than that of the elephant, besides being of much smaller dimensions.

TYPOGRAPHICAL.—At a meeting of the Sacramento Typographical Union No 46, held last Sunday evening, the officers were elected for the ensuing term of six months:

J P Olmstead President, A M Thomas First Vice President, G L Foster Second Vice President, H D Black, Secretary, J A Anthony Treasurer, C T Ingham Sergeant at Arms, David Bond, T P Ford, E Greve, J L Race and D Yost, to compose a Board of Directors.—Sac Bee.

It would appear that the enrollment and enlistment of slaves is in progress in Kentucky, against the decided protest of Governor Bramlette. In answer to Bramlette's statement that Kentucky has furnished her quota of troops without the assistance of Lucien Anderson member of Congress from the First District, who says that his district is 5,000 behind, that the remaining slaveholders are bitter Secessionists, and that their slaves ought to be enrolled instead of continuing the conscription of the poor whites.—Sac Union.

THE PORTLAND DIRECTORY, for the year 1864. Embracing a General Directory of Citizens, a Business Directory, and other Statistical Information relative to the Progress and Present Condition of the City.

A copy of the above work was placed upon our table last evening by the publisher. In hastily glancing over its pages we find it to contain much useful matter to set strangers right concerning the localities of business houses, etc, and much for the information of our own citizens. In addition to the contents in a business point of view, it has all the most important city ordinances, the organization, officers and members of the Fire Department, Military Companies, Incorporated Companies, etc. The statistical portion of the work shows a total population of 4,794, in the city. This calculation is based upon a census taken especially for this book yet we think it is a mis calculation. The population of 1863, according to the same authority, was put down at 4 057, which only allows us an increase of 737, when in other respects we have improved nearly double what we were a year previous. The table of distances, and the value of gold from the various mining camps, are interesting to every body.

LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.—The Directors are fitting up rooms in the brick building corner Stark and First streets, next to Wells, Fargo & Co. We understand the Directors labor under some embarrassment in consequence of the Constitution prohibiting them from using the original subscriptions for other purposes than the purchase of books. As the Directors are limited to initiation fees, quarterly dues and special donations for the payment of current expenses, we would suggest that those interested pay in their initiation fees and quarterly dues in advance of the opening of the reading rooms. The next quarter commences [illegible] last.

DELEGATES [illegible] CONVENTION.—A large portion [illegible] to the Union State Convention [illegible] Umatilla and Wasco counties, arrived last evening en route to Asotin. UNION MASS MEETING.—We understand that a call is in circulation for a Union Mass Meeting to be held on Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, for the purpose of nominating candidates to be supported at the ensuing municipal election. We trust that every Union voter, who cares for the welfare and prosperity of the city, will attend this meeting, and assist in preparing such a ticket as will command public confidence and insure success.

CLIPPER FROM VICTORIA.—By an advertisement in the British Colonist at Victoria, we learn the clipper schooner Jenny Jones, J Jones, master, was on the berth and loading for this city on the 14th inst. The propeller George A Wright was sold to Government, and could not be chartered for the trip.

BOUGHT OUT.—E L Jones & Co. of the Oregon Iron Works, have purchased all the tools, and moveable machinery of the foundry at Canemah, owned by Messrs Moore & Marshall. The whole of it will be shipped to this city, and placed into the new foundry, now in course of construction.

SALE DAY.—The regular sale of Mr A B Richardson will take place to day at ten o'clock. He never fails to have an attractive sale—and very often men make money more rapidly by attending them than they could in the same space of time out of a rich claim in Cariboo.

EASTER SUNDAY.—To-morrow being Easter will be observed in commemoration of our Saviour's resurrection, by a festival of the Churches throughout Christendom.

GOOD FRIDAY.—Yesterday was Good Friday. It was observed by appropriate services at the Episcopal and Catholic Churches in this city.

CHANGE OF TIME.—The time for holding services at the different churches, in the evening, has been changed from 6½ to 7 o'clock.

THE PORTLAND DIRECTORY, for the year 1864, Embracing a General Directory of Citizens, a Business Directory, and other Statistical Information relative to the Progress and Present Condition of the City:

A copy of the above work was placed upon our table last evening by the publishers. In hastily glancing over its pages we find it to contain much useful matter to set strangers right concerning the localities of business houses, etc., and much for the information of our own citizens. In addition to the contents in a business point of view, it has all the most important city ordinances, the organization, officers and members of the Fire Department, Military Companies, Incorporate Companies, etc. The statistical portion of the work shows a total population of 4,794, in the city. This calculation is based upon a consus taken especially for this book, yet we think it is a fair calculation. The population of 1863, according to the same authority, was put down at 4,057, which only allows us an increase of 737, when in other respects we have improved nearly double what we were a year previous. The table of distances, and the value of gold from the various mining camps, are interesting to every body.

FIREMEN'S ASSOCIATION.—The Directors are fixing up rooms in the brick building corner Stark and First streets, next to Wells, Fargo & Co. We understand the Directors labor under some embarrassment in consequence of the Constitution prohibiting them from using the original subscriptions for other purposes than the purchase of books. As the Directors are limited to initiation fees, quarterly dues and special donations for the payment of current expenses, we would suggest that those interested pay in their initiation fees and quarterly dues in advance of the opening of the reading rooms. The next quarter commences April 1st.

DELEGATES TO THE STATE CONVENTION.—A large portion of the delegates to the Union State Convention, from Baker, Umatilla and Wasco counties, arrived on the Hunt last evening, en route to Albany. The steamer Onward will leave Catemah on Monday after the arrival of the Senator from Portland, and if too much crowded for comfort, will lay all night Monday at Salem, and leave with the Salem boat on Tuesday morning early. The steamer Enterprise will leave Tuesday upon the arrival of the Senator, and in order to be a race will run through to Albany.

WINTER SET IN.—It was the common expression on the streets yesterday that "winter had set in," and we thought so too. Overcoats were very convenient to wear, doing business on the outside, while stores and shops were a frigid air inside, without the aid of stoves. Snow, hail and rain, came in alternate showers, and the wind was like a butcher's best steel. We apprehend the present state of the weather will not materially further hinder fruit prospects. And it may retard very greatly the people who are not yet over the mountains safely, on their way to Boise.

INSURANCE.—We observed at one of our principal business houses yesterday an operation that we suppose customers rarely think of, in saving them considerable "cash money for freight." It was the re-packing of boxes, tying them up, etc., to save freight, which they go by measurement. A saving of 6 in a case, we were told, on every gum-boot box, by taking off a part of it, and packing the goods more closely.

THE ENROLLMENT OF OREGON.—We publish the Provost Marshal's report of the enrollment of the State, this morning. Multnomah county furnishes the greatest number of men liable to Military duty, it appears from the report that we have 1,851. Wasco county is next largest, having 1,800. Then follows Linn with 1,491; Marion with 1,476; Jackson with 918, and least is Tillamook with a number of 41.

UNION MASS MEETING.—We understand that a call is in circulation for a Union Mass Meeting, to be held on Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, for the purpose of nominating candidates to be supported at the ensuing municipal election. We trust that every Union man, who cares for the welfare and prosperity of the city, will attend this meeting, and assist in preparing such a ticket as will command public confidence and insure success.

CURRENT FROM VICTORIA.—By an arrival in the British Colonist, at Victoria, we learn the clipper schooner Jenny Jones, J. Jones, master, was on the berth and loading, in the city, on the 14th inst. The propeller Lewis A. Wright was sold to Government, and could not be chartered for the trip.

BOILER OUT.—E. L. Jones & Co., of the Oregon Iron Works, have purchased all the tools and moveable machinery of the foundry at Oneonah, owned by Messrs. Moore & Marshall. The whole of it will be shipped to this city, and placed into the new foundry, now in course of construction.

SALE DAY.—The regular sale of Mr. A. B. Richardson will take place to-day at ten o'clock. He never fails to have an attractive sale, and very often men make money more readily by attending them, than they could in the same space of time out of a rich claim in Cariboo.

EASTER SUNDAY.—To-morrow being Easter, will be observed in commemoration of our Savior's resurrection, by a festival of the Churches throughout Christendom.

GOOD FRIDAY.—Yesterday was Good Friday, and observed by appropriate services at the Episcopal and Catholic Churches in this city.

CHANGE OF TIME.—The time for holding services at the different churches, in the evening, has been changed from 6½ to 7 o'clock.

MARKET REPORT AND REVIEW.

FRIDAY, March 25th—12 M.

Sales for the past week have been in the main inactive, although the spirit of shipments to the interior have been lively, more especially to the mining regions.

The Produce market is quiet, and all kinds are held at about the same figures. No transactions are reported to us, to any extent.

The crush of Flour has considerably abated, owing to late shipments. The price has advanced to 70 cents, and there are now held at that figure. Those are Wholesale Prices and farmers, coming in with such articles in wagon, cannot always get them. Their trade mainly depending upon their customers and being regulated by the supply and demand, we cannot always keep posted in relation to prices from first hands. To-day we heard small lots selling to jobbers at prices ranging all the way from 14 to 20 cents. Sales of Bacon from wagons are reported at 18 cents.

Oregon Beans find dull sale at 4cts. Dried Apples have advanced 1 cent. Wheat is quoted at 90 cents, Oats at 50 cts., and dull. Corn sales of 1[illegible] have been effected at $15 to $18 per ton.

The San Francisco fruit market stood as follows, on the 15th:

Apples, 3a4 cents per lb., No. 1 apples, 5a6 cents; pears, $a10 cents; dried plums, 15a20 cents; dried peaches, 10a12c. 8000 box of Oregon Apples received by steamer on the 14th, not in merchantable condition, sold from 75 cents up to $1 50 per box. One invoice of choice fruit sold at $2.

The market for flour and grain was dull; parties having parcels to sell found it impossible to get anything like the prices ruling the week before.

FOR BALD HEADS.

IT IS NOT MY INTENTION TO HUMBUG THE PUBlic. This Restorative has built up a world-wide reputation upon its own merits, as is considered by those who have used it, to be the best article ever invented for the Hair. Read the following certificate:

Lewiston, Sept. 3d, 1863.

This is to certify that I have used DEXTER'S HAIR RESTORATIVE, and I take great pleasure in recommending it to the public as a safe and effectual preparation for the restoration of the Hair. I was nearly bald when I commenced the use of it, and after using two bottles, I find it has produced a fine, healthy growth of hair, and that, too, in less than two months. I can heartily recommend it for its great virtues and efficiency. S. D. RAMSDELL.

Agnes Barton.

A STORY OF LOVE AND TRUTH.

"Yes, I married her, and shall I tell you why?"

I have often asked him why he had married the deformed woman he called wife, but had never obtained any answer. At this time, however, something appeared to have opened his heart and to have rendered him more than ordinarily communicative. We sat in the twilight on the stone steps of his grand old frame house, for, according to the common term, "he was well to do in the world." In fact, he could count his acres by the hundreds and his bank stocks and railroad shares by the thousands. Even as we sat there, I could see the distorted form of his wife limping about the interior, and as the fire flashed cheerily into a blaze, discern the scars and broad livid seams upon her face. That some strange accident had rendered her thus, I was confident, for she was evidently educated and possessed that rare gift in womanhood, "a low, sweet voice," that ever fell upon the ear soft as a summer's evening melody—attractive as her face was repulsive. Yes, I was confident that there must have been some strange accident in the matter, but how a man elegantly educated and refined, wealthy and traveled, should have bound himself to one thus deformed, had ever been a puzzle. And I was far from being alone in longing to fathom the mystery, for it had been a fruitful theme of conversation for many years. Vainly, however, had the gossips striven to lift the veil—to read the inner life of that homestead or learn of the past and its ghastly secrets.

And why should we admit the prying eye of idle curiosity to revel amid and make merry with the transactions of the inner, holier shrine of life? Why throw open to a gaping and censorious world the record of our loves and of our sorrows? Is there not in every human destiny, something that should be hid—something too tender for the hard hands of triumph to toss about and make a shuttlecock of? Are there not lines written in the record book of your earthly journey and mine, that should be open to no eyes but angels—that should die with us and be buried in the dust and ashes of forgetfulness? Truly, "the heart knows its own sorrows and the stranger should not intermeddle therewith."

But as we sat in the twilight and watched the clouds swiftly sweeping southward, so the clouds of past years appeared to sweep across the soul of him that sat by my side, now thin and evanescent, now tinged with sunshine, and flushed with beauty, and now dark and steadfast and laden. And yet he was not an old man; for but a short time previous had he crossed the dividing line, the "half-way house" of the poet. But his once dark locks were streaked with gray, and upon his face you read the unmistakable lines of pain, sobered down by present contentment, even happiness. Yet his words were not breathed without an effort, without pain, and it was evident that every fibre of his heart quivered at the thought of rehearsing the past.

"Shall I tell you why I married her?" he asked again. "The story is a brief one, and perchance not uninteresting. You shall hear it."

"But will it not give you pain?" I asked.

"Pain?" he answered, solemnly, and with tearful eyes and tremulous voice. "Pain? yes, but not such pain as you conceive. It is pain only that one of God's most beautiful and perfect creations—most noble women—should she be married thus by chance accident, destiny—call it by what name you will."

"She, then, was once beau—"

"Hush! Let me tell my own story, in my own way, and question me not. Agnes Barton was—but why should she not enjoy this glorious evening, and—and listen to the recital of the tale wherein she was the chief and unfortunate actor? Come hither, Agnes," he continued, calling his wife, in a voice, sweet from emotion and love, "Come sit by my side, while I tell, for the first time to strange ears, the story of our wooing."

"Ernest!" she replied, in her strangely musical voice, as she laid her hand gently on her arm, "Ernest, why—"

"Why should not he, not the whole world, know the true woman that I call wife? Nay, nay, Agnes, we have far too long indulged our morbid feelings, and now let all who will, learn the story. Sit, then," by my side—closer—closer still, so," and he drew her, lover like, to him.

"But why do you wish me to hear, Ernest, of what I only know too well?"

"Because I would have you hear me when I live over again other days, for

> Sickness and sorrow and pain
> Have been to our true love as links to the chain."

"Yes, I know, Ernest, and

> 'True and fast to each other, Robin,
> What ever ill tongues may say;
> Hoping the best of each other, Robin,
> Through the darkest and direst day.'

So I will e'en listen, and in silence, if I can, to the words my heart have long known to be true.

"Let me sketch, then, briefly, our early lives, in order that you may fully understand my story. Mine, you already know, at least all that is required; but I must paint you, Agnes, as I first saw her. She was

"Ernest!"

"It cannot be flattery to speak of you now as you were in other days, even before—but I will not anticipate. Agnes Barton, my wife now, was the belle of the city of P— in her more youthful days. Her form was faultless, her eye, but that remains even yet undimmed, and you can judge of its pristine beauty; her hair, it was not curling or waving, but rippled around her brow and head, as you have sometimes seen tiny waves around a stone in a brook, dancing in the sunlight. Her"

"Ernest, enough of this," broke in the low whisper of his wife.

"Well, dearest, so let it be, then, for if I would I could not paint you as you were at that time."

"To your partial eyes."

"Not so, but to all the world who looked upon your dazzling beauty."

"Once more, Ernest, enough of this."

"Well, then, to proceed. My wife was the daughter of a merchant and liberally educated. Her father, when I first saw her, was wealthy, but confidence in one who betrayed him brought him to the very verge of bankruptcy. I, at the time, was following my profession—the law—and was employed by him to save what I could from the wreck."

"And his honor, Ernest."

"Yes, that, at least, my dear wife and I succeeded in doing so, and enough property to purchase a little homestead far from the scenes of his ruin in which he could spend the remaining years of his life in peace, although not in affluence. While thus engaged, Agnes and I, of course, frequently met—became well acquainted—in short, learned to love one another. I will not dare not speak, of this days of golden promise.

"How like a sweet dream they appear, Ernest."

"Yes, Agnes, a happy dream from which one has been most cruelly awakened. As I said, Agnes and I learned to love each other and we became betrothed. I parted from her one summer evening when earth and sky appeared surfeited with their beauty—parted but to return in a short time and claim her before heaven and earth as my own. We had all been truly happy that evening and little dreamed that the sharp sword of sorrow and suffering and death was suspended above our heads by as slender a thread as one of her own golden hairs."

"Ernest," interrupted his wife with a sad smile, "Ernest, this is the fanciful talk of a lover."

"Agnes, we were lovers then—and have been ever since!" and he drew her still more closely to him. "But let me on. In a few days I received tidings that her father was seriously ill. With all speed I dispatched my business and hastened to her side in time. Yes, thank God! in time to see how a Christian looses the fetters of earth and puts on a robe of immortality. It was near the sun setting when I stood by his bed side. The flame like orb was still warmly shooting its fiery arrows to earth, yet slowly sinking to its western couch. With rosy hues its rays flushed the pale face of the departing one and lingered amid his thin hair as if angel fingers were already weaving a golden crown of immortal splendor about his brow. And—nay, Agnes, it is not for such an one we should weep."

The low sobs of his wife had interrupted his narration and it was some minutes before he proceeded, and then with a voice almost hushed to a whisper, he went on.

"Few and simple were his parting words—words of truthful holy import. With his feeble, icy, trembling hand, he placed that of his daughter—of Agnes—in my own, bade me protect and cherish her, and then was with the angels."

"Have I not done right in doing so?" he asked, solemnly, when the sobs of his wife were again stilled."

"The funeral ceremonies over—dust given to dust and ashes to ashes—Agnes accepted a home with a friend, while I was forced again to active business until time should, with its soothing influences, soften the blow and render it proper for us to be united."

"Well, the months rolled on, and—but I must hasten to a conclusion, for the clouds are growing heavy, and a thunder storm will soon drive us in from our pleasant seats.—Already the sweetbriars, roses, and violets are offering up their perfume as incense of thankfulness for the coming rain, that will soon moisten their parched roots and purify their dusty leaves. Aye, the storm will soon break over us, and as it is in Nature now, so it was in our lives then. But we little dreamed of the tempest hurling above us until it burst in fury; blinding—destroying. How well it is that we cannot see the handwriting of the future upon the walls of the present!

It matters not to tell of the minor influences or interests of those times, so I hasten on. During my business, I contracted that most loathsome of all diseases, the small-pox, and was hurried from my boarding-house to the hospital. How strange it is that at such a time all of humanity disappears from the hearts of those we are wont to call friends! Tended only by hirelings, I daily grew worse; and when death appeared to be standing by my side, the physician, who had found out from my ravings, and subsequently from letters that were in my pocket, of my love for Agnes, wrote her of what he considered to be my earthly doom, at the same time advising her not to come near me. As if a heart like hers could idly hear the news, and as idly remain away!"

"Ernest—husband!"

"Suffice it to say she came, and despite all warnings, took her place by my side, and nursed me until—until"

"No matter what—go on Ernest."

"Until the fell disease laid its foul touch also upon her! But, why dwell upon those days of suffering horror? We both lived. I, thanks to Agnes, unmarked; but she, alas! she, my beautiful and beloved one, with her beauty blasted; her loveliness gone, her wealth of sunny, rippling hair shorn, and—"

"Ernest," again interrupted his wife, "why mourn for the transient rose blush that the first frost blasts and destroys?"

"True, we should not mourn for the past, for it comes not back again; but who can gaze upon the faded flower, once glorious in its beauty, and not sigh a regret for its pristine splendor and perfume? But let me proceed. As I said, Agnes lost her beauty in tending by my bedside, and when we were again free to go abroad into the world, how I cursed the chance that had thus marred God's most perfect handiwork."

"Cursed, my husband? Oh, you could not."

"Yes, cursed, forgetting that as He created so, also, could He destroy, and that every act of His hand was tempered with both justice and mercy. Leaving behind us the pestilential city, we sought a country home where we could be united, though I had a very difficult task to bring Agnes to consent, for she would, with her generous heart, have released me, and bid me go forth into the world and take a fairer bride. Thank God! such a thought never even entered into my dreams for a single instant. No! no matter if the world has called me both proud and heartless, I am not guilty of that crime; for crime it would have been in the eyes of high Heaven and the angels. Well, we lived a life of retirement, she with her former friend, and I at a hotel near at hand, until the time when our health should be re-established. It came at length—the glorious Spring day that was to close upon my perfect earthly happiness, for who would not be happy with such a wife in prospect?"

"Ernest."

"Nay, Agnes, interrupt me not, but let me tell the story as it is—and was. It appeared as if that day of regal sunshine and beauty would never come to an end. But it did at last, as everything else in the world will. I left her when the shadows were gathering darkly and throwing their ebon veil over the burning disc of the sun. In my own room (for, far removed from the din and bustle of life, I had courted silence and solitude, save when with her) I was seated, thinking not of the dusky past, but the rosy future, when—"

"Ernest, husband, I beg of you to forbear."

"No, dearest, I must not falter now," he replied, twining his arm still more tenderly around her, and then proceeded as if he had not been interrupted. "When on my ear burst the ever startling cry of 'fire!' in my anxiety to save my wedding apparel, I neglected to seek my safety in flight. Oh, fatal, fatal mistake! The house was a frame one, and burned like tinder, and when I opened the door all was in flames, and I was driven back by the dense smoke. Hurriedly, I beat out the window, but alas! it was far too high to jump from with the slightest chance of safety. What should I do? where turn? In the whirlwind of conflicting emotions, I stood paralized for a moment and then thought again of the stairs. I recollected only the lurid flame—nothing more for many weeks."

"Again, Ernest, I beg of you to pause."

"What followed," he continued, "I learned from other lips. When all hope of my safety appeared lost, a female form, clad in light, snowy garments—dressed as a bride—darted through the gaping and affrighted crowd, and ascended the burning, tottering stairs. In a moment she was enwrapped in flames! Still, comet-like, she ascended, regardless of all. My name alone rang from her lips, for love had made her proof against the deep burning tongue of the demon of the flames in her heart; if not in her flesh."

"Ernest!"

"But men, strong, active men, who had before shrunk back appalled, could not calmly see her perish thus, and followed in her flaming track. Together, wrapped as in a fiery shroud, we were borne from the tottering mass, that in a moment after fell with a fearful crash."

"Thank God!" involuntarily fell from my lips.

"I can but continue my story as I learned it long afterwards. I was carried to the house where Agnes resided, insensible she still retained her consciousness, though it was many weeks before she recovered sufficiently to leave her bed; and need I say that the first journey she essayed was to my side? And how did she find me?"

"Husband, I beg—"

"Unscathed by fire, I lay there, perfect in every limb and feature, but mind wrecked—a lunatic! May yours and mine never be saddened by such a visitation. I could not describe my state if I would, for words are powerless. But the pen of another truly says—"

"At the least; husband, spare us that."

"No, dear wife, the tale would be unfinished without it. For this time forgive me, and let me continue. The pen of another truly says: 'The fever of delirium' when incoherent words wander on the lips of genius; when the sufferer stares strangely and vacantly on his ministering friends for starts with freezing horror from the arms of familiar love. Ah! what a dread tenant has the dormitory then! No food taken for the body, but deep for the brain! A human being surging with diabolical strength against his keepers—a human frame gifted with superhuman vigor only the more rapidly to destroy itself. Less fearful to the eye, but more harrowing to the soul, is the dormitory whose walls enclose the sleepless victim of remorse. No puppies or mandagora for him."

"And she—your wife—found you thus?" I could not keep from asking.

"Aye, she found me thus, and—"

"Beneath my touch, Ernest, and the sway of my voice, you sank into a quiet, refreshing slumber, and—"

"Awoke, Agnes, wife, for what?"

"No matter, husband."

"To find—great heavens! how shall I tell the horrors of that moment? To find you—"

"What I am, Ernest."

"Yes, and my tale is told. The sequel you already know—I married her. Do you remember the story of the English girl who, when told that her lover had returned from the bloody Crimea, crippled, disfigured for life, and would, of course, release her from her engagement? Do you remember the proud, noble answer of that brave English girl? 'Tell him,' she said, 'that if there is body enough left to contain his soul, that I will marry him!' Even so I felt and have been far more than rewarded. But come, my story is finished let us go in. The storm is bursting upon him and the thirsty earth is, spongelike, beginning to drink up the falling drops."

Letter from Three Good Little Boys.

The Richmond Whig of January 29th publishes the following "Letter from Three Good Little Boys," in which, under cover of a facetious style, the desperation of the rebel army is disclosed, and the "Government" is condemned for its inefficiency and retention of incompetent agents:

OUR IN THE FIELD, Jan. 20, 1863.

Dear Pa:—We take our Pen in Hand to write You a letter. We have Got something to say to You. It is Bad News, and we are sorry to say it. But it is the Fact! And we Hope You won't get Very Mad with us for telling it, for It is the Real Truth, and we don't mean to Hert your Feelings by telling it. Because, if we could help telling it, we wouldn't Tell It. Dear Pa, the Truth is this, Us Boys that You sent into the Field to Fight the Yankees are getting Mighty Hungry, and the Reason of it All is that we don't get Enough to Eat.

Now You Know that Boys that don't get a Plenty to Eat can't Fight. They can Fight some. But can't Fight Good. Because it takes Strength to Fight, and No Man is Strong that Don't get Enough to Eat. We All are willing Not to Eat as Much as You All at Home, and we All Don't Never get as Good Vittles as You All do, but we Enjoy what we do Get more than You All do, just Because we are so Plegg inked Hungry All the Time, but we have Got to Fight, and Fiting is Hard Work, and them that have to Fite are obliged to Eat. If they don't they Can't Fite Hard.

We know that You Love us as Much as any Pa ever loved any Boys. And we Know that it Herts You to Hear that we are Suffering. We would not say Anything about it, but we have kept it Back until We Can't keep it Back any Longer. If we did, we would soon get so Poor and Lean that the Yankees would Run Over us like a Big Fat Horse running over Timmie Little Gearls, and Dog on 'em they Shan't Dunit if we can Helpit, which we can if you will give us Enough to Eat. Because if the Yankees run Over us, what will Become of You and the Balance of the Folkes at Hoam? This is a Important Quession, don't You think so, Pa?

Dear Pa, please don't get Fretted with us for telling You the Reason we don't get Enough to Eat. You Have Got a Great Deal more Wisdom than we all Have, but then You have not Got a Bad Pane in Your Stummack because it is Empty, and Consequently Your Mind ain't turned to the Subject all the time, like Ours is. You have got so Many things to attend to that You can't be Expected to Think on this Subject as Often as we do, this is the Reason we make Bold to tell You something which perhaps you Don't Know, and we Beg You to Pardon and Forgive us for Writing you a letter about it. Indeed, indeed we don't mean any Harm by it, for to Get out of our Place by Doing it.

Dear Pa, the Cause why we don't get Enough to Eat is that old man, Mr. Northup. They say he Aint Got good sense. We don't say it, but Everybody says it. You told him to Feed us Well, and we Aint Well Fed, that is certain. He is to blame for it. Now if you was to get Another Man and tell him to Feed us Well, may be He would Do it. If he did not Do it, then nobody can blame you for Keeping a Man in office that has not got good sense. We feel sorry for that Old Man, and wish he had his right Mind and Enough sense to do the Business you told him to do. But we cant wait any longer, the Pane in our Stummack is so Bad and we are getting so Weak in our Joynts.

We know that the Fellows in old Northup's office says the People is to Blame. But that is the way that all follows do that Neglect their business. They try to throw the blame on somebody Else, Because if they did not throw the Blame on somebody Else, they would have to be Punished for their Faults and at the same time to confess that their Punishment was Just. But this Goes against the Grain, especially in the Fellows that Does Wrong. Either old Mr. Northrup and his fellows aint got the sense to Manage their business or else they have neglected it. Any way they ought to Quit and Make room for a new set. If they don't, us Boys will Starve, the Yankees will whip us, and then You all Hoam Folkes will Ketch the Verry Devil.

Hoping, dearest Pa, that you will Attend to this Right Away, we sign our names, with all love and Duty. Your affectionate sons,

BOB LEE
GUS BOWRYGARD
JOE JOHNSING
